OVERVIEW

Caleb Ritzheimer is an associate at Modrall Sperling practicing in both the Litigation and Natural Resources Departments.

Originally from the Chicago area, Caleb received undergraduate degrees from Miami University in Classics and Political Science. He earned his J.D. from Washington University in St. Louis. While in law school, he participated in the Interdisciplinary Environmental Clinic and served as Executive Primary Editor on the Washington University Jurisprudence Review. He also authored a student note in the same publication, for which he earned Washington University's Mary Hitchcock Collier Prize.

Outside of law, Caleb enjoys writing, going to museums, cycling, chess, and spending time with his two cats.
