

Railroads

OVERVIEW

Railroad law has been an integral part of Modrall Sperling's practice for decades. Our lawyers in this industry group have worked with railroad clients in a range of transactions including the acquisition and expansion of railroad rights-of-way through eminent domain and the siting and permitting of intermodal and other railroad facilities. We are conversant in the range of federal laws regulating the rail industry from the 1875 Railroad Right of Way Act to the Interstate Commerce Termination Act and were involved in negotiating the transaction that resulted in the creation of the New Mexico Rail Runner passenger train service and the establishment of a new international terminal in Santa Teresa, New Mexico. Our railroad litigators are members of the National Association of Railroad Trial Counsel and regularly defend grade crossing accident cases for freight and passenger railroads, employee injury claims arising under the Federal Employer's Liability Act (FELA). We also handle environmental and cultural resources issues for railroads.
